It's not a matter of if we can defeat diabetes.

To us, it's a matter of

HOW

For over a century, we have remained committed to eradicating diabetes. By supporting innovative thinking, listening to patients and medical experts, and building strong partnerships, we are working towards building healthier communities to defeat chronic disease and improve the lives of Canadians. HOW?

By donating to the Banting & Best Diabetes Centre, Canada's leading centre of excellence for innovation in diabetes research, education and clinical care.

By donating to the Centre Hospitalier de l'Université de Montreal (CHUM) to help build the first dedicated centre of expertise in diabetes for Quebec.

By donating to the Réseau d'action en santé cardiovasculaire (RASC) to help the non-profit create a new interdisciplinary program for obesity prevention and care of obesity.

By supporting Diabetes Canada's Camp Huronda in rebuilding their onsite medical facility, the Insul-Inn, so kids living with diabetes can experience camp safely.

By creating the Novo Nordisk Alberta Diabetes Fund (NOVAD) to further innovations that can help mitigate the impact of diabetes and obesity in Alberta.

By launching Cities Changing Diabetes in Mississauga, our commitment with the city to address systemic issues that contribute to chronic diseases, like diabetes.

By partnering with the University of Toronto to establish the Novo Nordisk Network for Healthy Populations, we are committed to discovering new ways to support healthy urban living, drawing on U of T's expertise in public health research.

Hearing loss education is crucial as the aging population continues to grow.

Approximately 3 Million Canadians Suffer From Hearing Loss That's 1 out of every 10 people!

It may come as a surprise that 19% of Canadian adults under the age of 70 experience hearing loss that negatively affects their ability to hear speech.

This number rises dramatically in older adults, with three-quarters of men and two-thirds of women experiencing significant hearing loss between the ages of 80 and 85.

CPIN, a digital patient messaging service

cpin-rcip.com

Primary care providers currently lack the infrastructure and time required to communicate with patients outside of scheduled appointments, let alone gather patient feedback on their care experience. Yet this is increasingly a requirement as care becomes more population-oriented and practices are expected to use their own data for performance monitoring and quality improvement. The Canadian Primary Care Information Network (CPIN), a not-for-profit organization led by a team of Canadian family physicians and researchers, aims to improve care and patient engagement by providing practices with an affordable and integrated knowledge and information technology to enable continuous outreach, assessment and quality improvement efforts.
